UK Outlook for Monday 14 Jun 2021 to Wednesday 23 Jun 2021:
High pressure across the majority of the UK looks to bring a lot of dry and settled weather at first. However, in the far north outside of the influence of this, there will be spells of cloudy, windy and wet weather at times. There will be a risk of showers in the south, especially mid-next week, which could even culminate in a thundery breakdown. Temperatures are expected to be very warm under the high, perhaps hot for a time in the south east, but look to remain average in the far north. Into the latter half of this period, there are signs that less settled conditions could push in from the north west to other parts of the country. Temperatures returning to nearer normal by the end of the week.
